LEGISLATIVE REPORT

INTRODUCTION

The legislative session continues to be extremely intense and very busy. They are trying to fit four months of work into two months of session, which is making everyone a little on edge, including legislators, staff, and lobbyists. The House approved its budget less than two weeks ago and already the Senate presented its budget proposal in subcommittees on Tuesday and voted this week to approve its version. That is record turnaround time for the Senate and allows both the House and Senate about a week and one-half to resolve any differences in their budget proposals before the June 30th deadline. Since there was very little money available to be provided to agencies and programs, the biggest battle seemed to be what to cut the most and how much of a salary increase to provide for teachers and state employees. There was also some controversy regarding funding for mental health services which have received a great deal of publicity, and it is unclear whether legislators will want to fund mental health more or cut the community services that were reportedly abused by providers.

Although the session just started last month, it is clear that the leadership of both the House and Senate is trying to wind down their committees and that they have already chosen the bills that they want to move forward. It is doubtful that any legislation that is controversial and does not have leadership support will be heard in Committee. It is rumored that the Senate committees will shut down at the end of next week to wrap up the Senate's business and approve the budget. On the House side, legislators seem ready to receive the Senate's budget and move forward on their business and, although committee work has picked up, it is clear that there are only a limited number of bills that they will hear before the end of the session.

This legislative report includes the remainder of the bills that were filed before the bill filing deadline and also includes provisions of the House budget proposal that was approved on June 5, 2008. We have also included several bill updates for bills that are moving through the legislative process. The next report will include the Senate budget provisions.
